PROGRAM: TIME/MOTION TECHNIQUES

Today's outdoor photography has many options for expanding creativity beyond that of a simple exposure. Long exposures, in-camera motion, lens zooming, and time-lapse photography all allow us to show motion with our images.

Using techniques such as Long Exposure, both day and night, we can now make photographs that dazzle the viewer. By using strong neutral-density filters in the day we can capture motion in still images. Familiar subjects such as water and clouds will be totally different. Time-lapse allows us to condense time and show a view of our world that is lost to the normal observer. You will learn how to shoot time-lapse and process your time-lapse sequences. Lewis covers use of an intervalometer and bulb-timers for long exposures and time-lapse whether you have an external device or one built into your camera.
